INTRODUCTION

I. THE CONTENTS OF THE CONCORDANCE

The concordance is based on the "Globe" edition of Chaucer's works,* with its text and line-numbering in both verse and prose. This was used, rather than one of Professor Skeat's, the only other complete editions in the present generation, because its text is rather more conservative, and in some parts is based on a larger number of MSS. With every practicable effort to include every word which

Textual Chaucer used, that the concordance may be the less likely to become obsolete after the publication of other texts, this is then emphatically a concordance to the Globe edition and not a complete new study of the text; and in general accepts the Globe edition as it is, and assumes no rigid responsibility for anything which is not in it. This fact has had some ill results. First, the four Globe editors avowedly waived uniformity in certain minor matters. No attempt has been made here to standardize such things as prevalent spellings or the use of apostrophes; though in a large number of passages i and u have been normalized as vowels, and j and v as consonants. Secondly, hundreds of small but undeniable mistakes have been found, and doubtless many others have been overlooked. Most of these mistakes are clear misprints or strikingly incorrect forms which are not justified by the MS or MSS mentioned as his basis by the editor involved. Almost all of those found have been silently corrected, after consulting the published MSS, or the facsimile of the Ellesmere MS or of Thynne's edition; a few of the most important corrections, as noted below, are indicated by square brackets; very rarely the punctuation has been slightly changed. There has been no attempt to catch all such errors, but merely those (probably the majority) have been corrected which have forced themselves on attention. Many little errors in the texts of the MSS printed by the Chaucer Society (there are many in its Ellesmere text) must have passed into the concordance as into the editions. The greatest number of errors are in the Canterbury Tales, the Legend of Good Women and the Boethius. This last case is particularly regrettable, for the editor of the Boethius offers "a critical text made from all the known MSS;" for which reason the present editors have felt less at liberty to make alterations even of spelling. Since this is a concordance to the Globe edition, the Globe reading has always been allowed to stand, if clearly and with full information intended, and what may seem to some a preferable reading is given as a variant. Very rarely a [sic] indicates what seemed a dubious reading or emendation. Even a misplaced line-number (210) in the Parson's Tale is left unchanged in order not to confuse the searcher. But four passages in the prose (B. Mel. 2252-3, † 2623-4, 2854, Bo. 2. p. 2. 310), put in by the Globe editors without MS authority in order to fill out the sense, have been entirely rejected. Such insertions or errors in the edition must not be supposed, of course, fatally to mar its reliability or value.

All works contained in the Globe edition have been included, and no others. This means all works

* The Works of Geoffrey Chaucer, edited by Alfred W. Pollard, H. Frank Heath, Mark H. Liddell, W. S. McCormick; Macmillan and Co., 1913 (originally issued in 1898).

† The status of this passage is indicated in the Globe edition so ambiguously that it was not noticed till the proof was being read, too late to remove from the concordance four of the numerous lines involved. These (two under Counsel, one each under Can and Furthermore) are noted among the Corrigenda; which also note the more important of the other slight errors found too late to be corrected in all the entries involved. The above passage seems to have been inserted on a false supposition. Passages really essential to sense and continuity may fairly be presumed to have once been present in an original work, but not necessarily in a translation of it.

contained in Skeat's six-volume edition* except the last two of the three lyrics which he printed at the beginning of his fourth volume; these two, which he entitled Complaint to my Mortal Foe and Complaint to my Lode-sterre, are disregarded as showing no particular evidence of authenticity, less even than the Balade of Complaynt. The first of the three, which he called Womanly Noblesse and the Globe editor Balade that Chaucier Made, they seem to have been justified in including.

Certain later sections in the Astrolabe, marked by Skeat "Supplementary Propositions," are not in the Globe edition and are disregarded here. The chief question was as to the translation of Le Roman de la Rose, but was not difficult to decide. This could not be wholly omitted, and there was no satisfactory alternative short of wholly including it. It may seem odd to print words from its certainly non-Chaucerian portions among Chaucer's words, but the inclusion suggestively exhibits the likenesses and unlikenesses of the two vocabularies. Students of Chaucer are aware of the spuriousness of at least the middle part of the work and the doubt as to any of it, and other readers are sufficiently warned by the title-page and this introduction. They may learn further facts from works cited in Miss E. P. Hammond's Chaucer: A Bibliographical Manual (1908), J. E. Wells' Manual of the Writings in Middle English, 1050-1400 (1916), and D. D. Griffith's Bibliography of Chaucer, 1908-1924 (Univ. of Washington Press, 1926), and from the introductions to the Globe and Skeat editions.

In spite of the position of the Globe edition as basis of the concordance, certain probably genuine passages omitted from its text are fully recorded. These are Prol. 252a-252b (taken from the Hengwrt MS), WBP. 44a-44f (from Skeat's larger edition), Cl. T. 1212a-1212g (the so-called Host-stanza, from the Ellesmere MS), and TC. 2, 1750a-1750g (from MS Rawlinson Poet. 163).† They are numbered as above. An additional passage in the Astrolabe, 25-32, taken from Thynne's first edition and marked "var Th" in each quotation, is very likely not genuine. One or two other additional passages included (B. NP. 4060 a-b) are probably not genuine.‡

The variant readings, numbering about twenty-five hundred, are distinguished by var. This means simply variants from the Globe edition (as is stated above), even when that has an emendation and even when the present editors think the MS-reading preferable. The aim has been to record all variants of importance which an editor might choose for a text. Many of them the present editors would never consider. They include all sorts, from readings certainly right to readings almost certainly wrong, the latter especially in passages with many readings but none satisfactory. Variants have especially been recorded where the Globe reading is ill-supported by the authorities and the well-supported reading is acceptable; e.g., Pight, ABC. 163, Reufulles[t], PF. 613, Scour, I. Pars. 670-5. There has also been a tendency to include readings, even if probably wrong, where fairly numerous authorities are practically unanimous; also substitutions of like words which involve a different prefix or suffix, or Norse for Anglo-Saxon origin, Latin for French, etc.; and sometimes to include good readings which make impossible verse, on the chance that something else in the line is wrong, and good readings which change the number of syllables. For possibly or certainly genuine passages (not marked var) omitted in the Globe, see the preceding paragraph. The fact has been considered that variants may be of two kinds; there may be only one correct reading, or there may have been author's revision. The intention has been to include all important variants in the "G"-prolog of the Legend of Good Women, even the same words in corresponding passages if there is significant alteration of some sort. Variants from this version are marked G., not var. After line 374 the passage is taken from the Chaucer Society reprint of the MS, since after that point the Globe editor does not print the G-text in full. There has been some discrimination against the early printed editions (as being late texts); and also against MS Harl. 7334, owing to the conviction that it contains tinkering by another than Chaucer, though this fact is somewhat offset by its earliness. Mere different spellings or different tenses, numbers, etc., of the same word are ordinarily disregarded, and such variations as Lyte-Lytel, Nil-Wil, Oure self or Us self, etc.; usually also, where a considerable number of MSS are available, less important variants found in but one; also, usually, variants involving merely the order of words. The prose works and the Romaunt of the Rose have been drawn on less than other works. An edition will naturally in its notes take account of far more and smaller variants than a concordance; to have let down the bars further would have inevitably multiplied the variants many-fold. That only about twenty-five hundred of them are given is due to a desire not to overload with trifling alternatives or corrupt readings; and also to the relatively reliable character of Chaucer's

* His smaller Student's Chaucer contains all the works recognized by the concordance, and no others.

† As given by Sir W. S. McCormick in An English Miscellany presented to Dr. Furnivall (1901), p. 297, and by Professor Root in his two books mentioned below.

‡ The several made-over and spurious prologs and epilogs in the Canterbury Tales of course are disregarded. These are probably hack-work done in the scriptoria for commercial reasons, to fill in gaps, or to make adjustments for a changed order of the tales, that ill-informed purchasers might not fancy they were getting damaged copies.

text. The editors feel more than ever that on the whole Chaucer's text is in good condition, probably as good as that of any other important medieval author except Dante, and much better than Shakespeare's.

The variant readings are selected from all significant available collections of readings; from the textual notes in the Globe edition, Skeat's six-volume edition, Dr. John Koch's Geoffrey Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (Heidelberg, 1915), from Koch's review of the Globe edition (Englische Studien, XXVII. 1-61), Miss E. P.

Sources of the Hammond's Text of Chaucer's Parlement of Foules (in Decennial Publications of the University of Chicago, VII. 3-25), Dr. R. K. Root's list of errata in the Chaucer Society's texts of the Troilus MSS (in his Textual Tradition of Chaucer's Troilus, pp. 273-7), Flügel's New Collation of the Ellesmere MS (Anglia, XXX. 401-12). Frequently the Ellesmere and Thynne facsimiles were referred to, and were used (as already remarked) to correct errors in the Chaucer Society reprints. For a considerable number of passages in the Canterbury Tales collations of most of the extant MSS have been used which were made by one of the present editors some years ago. Further, all the variants were sent for comparison to Professor F. N. Robinson, who kindly allowed Dr. P. F. Baum to extract for the present purpose many variants from his forthcoming edition of Chaucer's works. Professor R. K. Root kindly supplemented the variants for the Troilus from the textual notes of his edition,* which has since appeared, based on study of all the MSS and the successive revisions which he finds indicated. Finally, the variants for the Canterbury Tales have been compared with the collations made by the late George Stevenson and President H. N. MacCracken, who about the years 1905-1914 collated some thousand variable and crucial passages with nearly all the extant MSS of the Tales. From these collations, through the kindness of Dr. J. T. T. Brown, one of the editors was enabled to take some scores of variants. In consequence of the two last-mentioned comparisons, for three-quarters of Chaucer's poetry the concordance contains the most important variants from practically all existing MSS. For the remaining quarter of the poetry the MSS are nearly all in print already (for most of it they are few), and therefore have been scrutinized for variants by somebody. As to the other three works, Professor Liddell's text of the Boethius in the Globe edition also is based on all the known MSS (as was mentioned above), the text of the Astrolabe on most of them, and that of the Romaunt of the Rose on both extant texts. Finally the obvious warning must be given that there has been little means of controlling readings which no editor or critic has thought good enough to mention in his notes, even if some editor (not one of the Globe editors) has used them in his text. There can hardly be many such that are important.

A variant with its whole line is usually taken from the authority which gives the best sense and verse. When only the variant word or two was available, the context, from the Globe edition, is enclosed in square brackets. Such cases cannot be confused with the few cases where the Globe editors enclose a word or two in brackets; or with the very rare cases where the present editors

Method of Presenting have used brackets to alter slightly a reading of the edition or of an accessible
Variant Readings authority, when the change consists in substituting one word for another; none of these cases, of course, is marked var. The variant lines are printed as nearly diplomatically as was practicable, but obsolete letters have been modernized. The authority for a variant is not mentioned when it is easily accessible, as in a publication of the Chaucer Society; otherwise the MS or other text is indicated after the line-number by an abbreviation, which is interpreted in the list of abbreviations below.

As to titles, headings, rubrics, incipits, explicits, etc., the Globe editors have been followed where they had MS authority, not always with any conviction that Chaucer wrote the form given, and with the omission of what Chaucer could not possibly have written (e.g., after the Cook's Tale). The edition has occasionally been corrected by the MSS, and one or two other headings, etc., have even

Extra-Textual been added for the sake of uniformity. Variants are practically never given. As to Features glosses and marginalia, the Globe editors had to be followed in omitting almost all of them; many of the Latin quotations are probably due to Chaucer himself, but most are not original writing of his. Anyone who wishes to consider all of Chaucer's non-English vocabulary and all the extra-textual features will have recourse to the MSS. The task of tracing and appraising the extra-textual features was undertaken by a student as a dissertation, which was stopped by the war.

There are upwards of three hundred emendations in the Globe text, seventy per cent of them in the Romaunt of the Rose. The concordance indicates them by em after the line-number. This includes all that the Globe editors designate in their textual notes or by square brackets, except some trifling changes in the mere form of a word, and certain longer passages supplied by them without author-

Emendations ity, which (as already stated) are disregarded in the concordance. It so happens that, unknown to them, a few of their emended readings exist in unpublished MSS; it is believed that all such cases as have been found have been so indicated.

II. METHOD AND TREATMENT

The chief question as to arrangement was whether to spell the head-words in a medieval or the modern way. After thorough experiment the former proved to be unwise. A Middle English dictionary might adopt the oldest Middle English form, but a Chaucer concordance could not. No standard Chaucerian spelling exists, or can be devised without a somewhat high-handed procedure; which doubtless would be necessary in a Chaucer dictionary or glossary, but can hardly be thought to be so in a concordance. The great delay involved by such an arrangement, and the enormously increased bulk of cross-references, were also considerable arguments. The modern spelling in a concordance is about as good for the linguistic student and much better for the general reader. The policy is therefore to use modern spelling for the head-words which are not obsolete, with cross-references when necessary. But no distinction is made between the possessive and the nominative plural, unless they are differently spelled; i.e., the apostrophe is not here used.

As to other matters of arrangement, with proper names the policy is the same as with other words; the form familiar to-day, if there is such, is used in the head-word. But a Latin form or ending is usually regarded as constituting a different word from a Romance or English form. Latin head-words are spelt in the classical way, and French in the modern. Cases where the -est ending of the verb is combined with the pronoun (-estow) are put under the -est form. Under the -eth form is put the contracted form of the third person singular of the present indicative (with a cross-reference from the contraction); excepting for the verbs Lest and List, where the forms are sometimes difficult to identify with certainty, and for possible cases under the verb Let in an exhortation or the like. These contracted forms are often difficult to distinguish from weak preterits. Under the -eth form also of course is put the plural imperative in -eth, but if a possible contraction of this form is the same as the singular form (e.g., Trust) it is left there, owing to the difficulty of deciding whether it is plural or singular. The y- prefix is disregarded in alphabetizing the past participle, but not in other cases. Words of like meaning but different suffixes are treated as separate words. Dialectal forms when unmistakably used for "local color" are listed separately, with a cross-reference. A curious difficulty sometimes arose with verbs of which the subject is Men. Sometimes this word takes a singular verb, oftener a plural; but at times the verb-form is ambiguous. In very numerous cases it is difficult to decide as to the identity of a grammatical form, as with some present and preterit forms, and the context helps but little because of Chaucer's habit of shifting tenses; in not a few other cases two or more words which logically should be separated are so difficult to distinguish that competent judges might not agree. Such issues have sometimes frankly been evaded, and the forms left together. A dictionary can make difficult distinctions because it can omit ambiguous cases, but a concordance cannot. Words have been put together which might well have been separated rather than run the risk of putting something in the wrong place. If such doubtful forms are separated, warning is given by cross-references.

In the arrangement no doubt occasionally there are inconsistencies. Frequent difficulties were due to the attempt to reconcile theoretical and practical considerations, and to give their due weight to the convenience of the specialist and of the more or less general reader. In deciding on the treatment of a word consideration had to be given to its frequency, its relation in one way or another to other words, questions of synonym and homonym, what had been done in analogous cases, generally accepted views as to Chaucerian grammar, and at the same time the form of a word in the text. Sometimes the logical thing to do is misleading and inconvenient for everybody, and sometimes the convenient thing is unscientific.

The usual practice of concordances is followed in alphabetizing homonyms together, whether cognate or not. But when one of two homonyms is given in full and the other only by specimens, they are separated. In a very few other cases, of voluminous words and for special reasons, homonyms are separated; Have, auxiliary and full verb, in its various forms, and Might, noun and verb (both Have and Homonyms Might being represented only by specimens); Sin, noun or verb, and adverb or conjunction or preposition; Will, noun and verb. The headings indicate the separation. Foreign words are separated so far as possible from English homonyms, but it is difficult at times to decide whether to regard a word as French or English.

As to obsolete English words, the policy has been if possible to adopt a normal Middle English spelling which is represented among the quotations, with a cross-reference if necessary. Occasionally this Middle English spelling is inevitably the same as that of a modern quite different word; the two Obsolete Words words, therefore, if both in the concordance and given in full, are mingled. No indication is given with the head-word as to whether the word is modern or Middle English (e.g., Masked, Tire, Wood). A modern word with a prefix or suffix not now used with it is treated as obsolete, but fuller and shorter forms of the same ending are usually together. Obsolete head-words are modernized to the extent of using i for y as a vowel, except sometimes for the prefix y- or at the end of a word and in proper names, and are alphabetized accordingly. Occasional slight liberties in treating head-words have been taken in order to keep in consecutive order words which are closely connected; e.g., Cristen comes with Christian shortly after Christ. The infinitive of obsolete verbs is regularly spelt -e; the preterit plural of obsolete strong verbs is regularly spelt -e(n), and the past participle -en; in the second person singular of the preterit, the -e sometimes but not always found is usually disregarded in alphabetizing. When a verb in use to-day has in Chaucer a strong preterit instead of a weak, the archaic form is retained as head-word. It is sometimes difficult to be uniform in practice with the varying archaic preterit forms of strong verbs; when such forms are much varied, they are sometimes put under a single one of them, usually the modern; but it is hoped that the cross-references will prevent trouble. When a word is not easily recognizable as a modern word, the obsolete form is (very rarely) retained as head-word; e.g. Rede (consilium dare) is separate from Read (legere), and Brouke (A. S. brúcan) is not under Brook. Cross-references minimize any danger of inconvenience.

A very large number of words appear in the text sometimes as one word, sometimes hyphenated, and sometimes as two (or more) separate words. The variations in the MSS are aggravated, if anything, by divergent practice on the part of the four Globe editors. Even if they had desired uniformity, it is sometimes difficult to decide whether, for example, we have a compound verb or a verb-adverb combination (cf. Out-twyne, Rosem. 11). With the variations in the text, with the frequent difficulty of deciding the rights of the matter, and even with the variations in modern usage, it seemed impracticable to adopt a rigid set of rules.

Such a set would certainly either have sometimes done violence to all usage and expectation, or have been too complicated to be of much service.

A compound printed as one word in the text (with no hyphen) is practically always treated in the concordance as one word, except for compounds of Self, and a very few times with a rare form like "asmoch," "neveradell." A compound printed as two (with no hyphen) is nearly always two in the concordance; but the safest plan is to look under the combination as well as under the components. With hyphenated words the practise varies. If either part would nowadays be considered a mere prefix or suffix, the parts are practically always together; otherwise usually separate, except sometimes when the text and the concordance have the compound in other passages as a single word. On the whole, in doubtful cases, the tendency has been to make two words rather than one; in case of verbs, to favor the verb-adverb conception rather than the compound verb; but it is possible that the same compound may not always have been treated in the same way in this matter. The intention has been to show by a cross-reference, if necessary, where other cases of a compound may be found (unless the words are consecutive), but even if a cross-reference is wanting it will be safest to look in the second obvious place. In case of a compound which consists of words each of which is represented only by specimens, the concordance shows all cases where printed as one word, but the very fact that the components are not printed completely shows that completeness is not to be expected for the combination. None of these compounds is such that the incompleteness is likely to be often regretted. If one of the components is printed in full, obviously all instances of the compound are either there or under the compound. Of a compound which consists of words each of which is printed in full, obviously all cases can be found either under its own heading or under the components.

Most of the quotations consist merely of a single line of verse or an equivalent bit of prose. The intention has been to present every line of verse fully, in order not to obscure the metrical value of the concordance-word. It has been the intention that every quotation should be extended in which otherwise the concordance-word would be unintelligible or misleading. This work was done by one assistant, verified by another, and supplemented by the editors.

The cross-references, upwards of two thousand, do not pretend to be exhaustive. Usually none is given if the second word comes directly after the first, usually none between the text-reading and a variant, usually none if the second word would inevitably come to mind. The policy has not been to refer from the unfamiliar to the familiar readily associated with it, but only vice versa. Fewer cross-references are given for the Romaunt of the Rose than for other works. A cross-reference does not necessarily imply, even when the words look alike, that they are connected, but merely that someone may wish to consider them together. One point is due to the exceptional character of this concordance, to the great variety of Chaucerian spellings; A see B may mean that some words spelt A are under B, or that some words meaning A are under B. The cross-reference is sometimes used as a danger-signal (as has been stated) when there is doubt as to the correct placing of a word. On cross-references for compound words, see this latter heading in this introduction.

Specimens of Commonest Words

The following words are represented only by specimens:

A (indef. art.)	Haddest (auxiliary vb.)	Nat (neg. adv.)	Thereof

Relatively fewer specimens are taken from the prose than the verse, and few from the Romaunt of the Rose. It has been the intention to represent adequately all meanings and uses of a word, especially unusual and archaic uses, and to some extent the varying spellings; in particular, for certain of the words a point has been made of including all peculiar uses noted by Skeat in his large glossary. The relative frequency of both kinds of variation in Chaucer is not always represented. The use of one of these words in a common phrase is less regarded when other words in the phrase are printed in full. Almost all of these words occur, of course, with very great frequency, some of them enormously so; to say nothing of And and That, of As, for example, there are at least 4,400 cases, and of So at least 3,150. In an early writer it is a pity not to give all instances of prepositions and preterit-present verbs, especially, which vary so subtly from age to age, but it was desirable not to swell the book beyond a single volume. Most of the somewhat less profuse words which are partially omitted are so colorless that it would have been absurd to give them in full. Of Say few cases are omitted except most of those in the Rose and most of those in the phrase "that (this) is to seyne" in the prose works. Of A as a preposition (written for On, etc.) few cases are omitted, but it is marked 'specimens' owing to the probability that now and then one of the makers of the slips has overlooked a case through confusion with the indefinite article. This omission is the less important because this spelling is often due to the whim of a scribe. Likewise of very common words like Be, Have, Man, even the less common parts (except Haveth and Has) are represented merely by specimens owing to the impossibility of being sure that the makers of slips got all these while omitting the commoner forms. All forms of Shall and Will were included almost at the last moment, owing to the importance of these words for the history of the future tense.

Here follow the abbreviations for the titles of Chaucer's works, in the order in which they come in the concordance. The spellings are modernized. When Skeat uses one title and the Globe editor another, both are given, and also the first line of the poem. In the Canterbury Tales the prologs and links (except at the end of a "group") come under the tales which follow. The traditional division of the Abbreviations Tales into nine groups is retained, and also their designation by the letters from A to I, and the corresponding line-numbering, which go back to the Six-text Print of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (Chaucer Society, issues for 1868-77). Though the present editors believe this division to be erroneous, * there was no choice but to accept it. No doubt any later editor of Chaucer who adopts a different division will give this older nomenclature and line-numbering on every page, so that this concordance and other Chaucer literature will remain intelligible.

Every passage, reference and cross-reference has been verified under the supervision of the editors; likewise the alphabetizing and other arrangement. Much of this has been done more than once. The Globe text has also been entirely checked through to catch omissions, and Skeat's admirable glossary has been very extensively used to ensure completeness and accuracy. The proofs have been

Precautions read through twice with the copy, mostly by the editors, partly under their supervision.
In Preparation In spite of everything, it is too much to hope that there are no actual errors. It is certain that there are some inconsistencies, though it is hoped (once more) that the cross-references will minimize their importance. This concordance is not only one of the largest ever made in any language; the archaic and greatly varying forms of words and spellings, and the variations in compounding of words, have made it perhaps quite the most difficult to construct.

III. HISTORICAL

The project for a Chaucer concordance has had a long history, and a distinguished descent.* The concordance was originally planned by the Chaucer Society, which was an offshoot in 1868 of the Early English Text Society. This was founded in 1864 for the publication of a larger number of early English works than the Philological Society could publish, partly in order that they might be available for the purposes of the latter society's New English Dictionary, which was actually begun in 1860 and projected in 1858 or thereabouts. The present volume accordingly is descended in the fourth generation from the greatest work of linguistic scholarship ever produced.

Behind all these creations stands the vivid personality of Frederick James Furnivall (1825-1910), † with his learning, energy and magnetism, and power of striking other people into enthusiastic activity. His versatility and breadth of interests have made him a figure in the biographies of surprisingly numerous men of different types in the later nineteenth century, but philological study was his chief love. The Chaucer concordance was one of his few failures. Information about its early history is found chiefly in announcements by various periodicals, in the publications of the Chaucer Society, and in a mass of several hundred letters and other written papers, which have come into the hands of the present editors. First of all appeared in the Athenaeum for 23 December, 1871, an invitation to volunteer workers to help "make a complete Glossarial Concordance to Chaucer's works," and "complete lists of the poet's rhymes" (later published separately), using the society's reproductions of the MSS as they should appear; a fortnight later Notes and Queries printed a similar notice as to a "Chaucer Concordance and Glossary." Some dozen persons volunteered, and to them Furnivall issued sections of the "Six-Text" and eight pages of printed Rules for the Compilation of the Glossarial Concordance to Chaucer's Works, dated 23 March, 1872, and evidently written by him. A line of poetry or equivalent bit of prose from the MS taken as standard was to be written out, on a slip of paper supplied by the worker himself, for each word to be recorded, with variants (even variant spellings) from the other MSS. Lines were to be numbered merely by the page and line of the society's publications. Ordinary auxiliary verbs, prepositions and other "Particles" were to be recorded only a few times by each worker. The amateur workers were also asked to define for each word its inflectional form and its meaning; and for the final word in a line to note the word it rimes with. In the sixth report of the society, June, 1876, Furnivall was able to report about half of the Canterbury Tales as fully dealt with, but from that year to 1888 nothing was done. From time to time he made announcements as to the concordance, sometimes cautious and sometimes sanguine, on the covers of the various publications of the Chaucer Society. From 1877 to 1883 or so appeared the statement that Professor Hiram Corson (1828-1911, professor of English in Cornell University from 1870) had "agreed to edit the * Chaucer lexicography seems to have begun late in the 16th century, and in much the same manner as all early lexicography. At the end of Grammatica Anglicana (by P. Greenwood?), 1594, with a special title-page, is a five-page list of "Vocabula Chauceriana quaedam selectiora et minus vulgaria, ipsae hodie poetarum deliciae, una cum eorum significatis . . . eodem autore." (One of the present editors is here supplementing the British Museum Catalog.) Beginning with Speght's first edition, 1598, glossaries, or explanations of "old and obscure words," are provided by Chaucer editors. The Catalogue of MSS in the Library of the Hunterian Museum in the University of Glasgow, by John Young (Glasgow, 1908), p. 250, mentions a fragmentary MS concordance to Chaucer's works, by an unknown eighteenth century author.

Society's Chaucer Concordance." Furnivall's reports for 1880 and 1881 show some little impatience as to progress; his introduction to Supplementary Canterbury Tales (1888) speaks with still more asperity of "7 years neglect by Prof. Corson," and his report for 1888 states that Professor Corson "was never able to touch it." Considering the state of the material and certain features of the plan, one cannot entirely share Furnivall's feelings.

In 1888 the "Chaucer glossary" or "Glossarial concordance" took a new lease of life, and Furnivall was once more of good cheer. In two of the society's publications for that year he announced the editorship of Mr. W. G. Aylward (an error for W. W. Aylward, died 1893), who retained the responsibility till 1891. This editor preferred to serve under the name of Wilson Graham, by which Furnivall mentions him as editor for the concordance in the introduction mentioned just above. He had helped in preparing F. S. Ellis' Lexical Concordance to Shelley (published in 1892), a work obviously modeled on the plan of the Chaucer concordance. "Mr. Graham" began energetically. Announcements, and calls for volunteers to make the remaining slips, appeared in the Athenaeum (4 August, 6 October, 1888, 26 July, 1890), and numerous other papers in Britain and America. Professor F. J. Child promoted the work in America by a notice in the New York Nation, 11 October, 1888, and by other means. Furnivall's former Rules, with trifling changes, were reprinted and distributed, and the work proceeded as before. "Mr. Graham" carried on a large correspondence for four years with his unknown and tyro helpers, patiently answering questions, interpreting rules, and sometimes providing standardized slips and paying expenses. Some recruits deserted, others wrote dubious, warning and even sub-acid letters as to the plan, but by 1891 apparently nearly all the slips had been made, and hope began to skip over the long road ahead and consider negotiations toward printing, perhaps in America.

In 1891 "Mr. Graham" relinquished the editorship to Dr. Ewald Flügel (1863-1914), then a Privatdozent in the University of Leipzig, who the year before had agreed to take it; a young scholar with achievements already to his credit, son and grandson of widely-known lexicographers and scholars.* The announcement appeared in the Athenaeum for 18 July, 1891. His editorship is mentioned on the covers of the society's publications dated from 1890 on, and ceases in 1911, shortly after Furnivall's death; the first few of these volumes Furnivall may have ante-dated, as he often did on his usual principle of nullus annus sine linea. The hundreds of thousands of slips which Dr. Flügel inherited were in no inviting condition. Some of the helpers had been or became persons of distinction in scholarship; among the others, Mrs. H. R. Haweis (died 1898), who wrote peppery letters about the concordance, had done much to popularize Chaucer, and H. H. Gibbs (1819-1907) became governor of the Bank of England and Lord Aldenham. But most of them seem to have been persons without any particular scholarly training. The material was on slips of all sizes, shapes, colors, weights and textures, from paper that was almost tissue-paper to paper that was almost tin. Every slip contained matter that had to be reconsidered, revised and often added to or deleted. Further, certain small parts of Chaucer's work had not been concordanced at all, yet there seems to have been no reliable record as to just what had been done or not done, or as to policies and decisions. In 1892 at the age of twenty-nine Dr. Flügel became professor of English philology in Stanford University, and found a task requiring relatively few books a suitable one in his situation. The library, now adequate, and housed in one of the most beautiful university library buildings in America, was small in the pioneer days of the institution. He took hold with enthusiasm, and formed a plan which he realized would take many years to execute. In 1900 the Delegates of the Clarendon Press considered printing the work when it should be finished, much as Furnivall had hoped in 1888; reserving decision till they had seen more of it, they thought the plan at that time "a little ambitious," and believed a pure concordance to be what was needed. After some years of discouragement, from 1904 to 1908 Professor Flügel received from the recently established Carnegie Institution of Washington very large subventions, which enabled him to employ more expert assistance than he could find among immature college students, to pay for verifying and copying in European libraries, and during the years 1904-7 to devote his entire time to this work. He had leave from his university, and pursued his task in Leipzig, where for the more exacting parts of the work he was aided by Professor Eugen Einkenel and others. He himself collated parts of the Chaucer Society's printed copies with the MSS, and it is in consequence of his revelation of the inaccuracy of its copy of the Ellesmere MS that a superb facsimile of it was published at the Manchester University Press in 1911. Besides the immense mass of Chaucer-slips over which he toiled, he collected with the aid of students and others some million slips giving the occurrences of words in other early English writers, and in French and Latin, largely extracted from glossaries in the publications of the Early English Text Society and elsewhere. His estimate in 1908 of a total of about 1,120,000 slips in hand seems moderate.

* See Flügel Memorial Volume (University Series, XXI.), Stanford University, 1916; Anglia, XXXIX. i-xiv; Ewald Flügel, Eine Darstellung seines Lebens und Wirkens, mit einem Vorwort von Felix Flügel (Germanische Studien, XLI.; Berlin, 1926).

The nature of his plan and its progress are shown in his reports in the Year Books of the Carnegie Institution for 1904-8. The history and plan are more vividly exhibited in descriptions and specimens printed in 1911 and 1913 in Anglia (of which he was one of the editors), XXXIV. 354-422, XXXVII. 497-532. He now recognized that what he had earlier hoped to do would require as he says the labors of a whole academy. His scheme, still very extensive, was modeled more or less on the Oxford Dictionary, and in his last years involved giving for each word the following entries, so far as applicable: (1) Occurrences and forms of the word in Middle English, Anglo-Saxon, Old French, Latin, and other languages, of various dialects and periods; this often involved discussion of etymology, frequency, synonyms, usage and meaning, often at very great length. (2) Spellings and inflections in Chaucer, with their frequency and the MSS where found. (3) Words with which the word rhimes in Chaucer. (4) Its prosodic value—accentuation and number of syllables. (5) Variant readings, with the MSS where found. (6) All the passages where the word appears in Chaucer, with definitions and an unusually large amount of context; the passages are not arranged in a fixed order, but very much divided and subdivided under the various meanings and uses. The most notable feature is the collection of the earliest occurrences of words, large numbers of citations from languages other than English, and the detailed analysis of meanings and uses. No mere description can do justice to the dignity and amplitude of this work of scholarship, if it could have been completed and published. It would have set a new high-water mark for lexicography within its limited scope; and it anticipated the prophecy of the editors of the Oxford Dictionary that further progress in the field must be with the specialized vocabularies of certain subjects, authors or periods. In 1913 he estimated that he had completed the preliminary draft of A-E, "about 20,000 quarto sheets," and that he might finish the whole work in seven years more. However this might have been, he was still unwilling even to consider the subject of beginning to print. At his death in November, 1914, the work was more or less finished, subject to extensive additions and revision, as far as H. Completed on the same scale it would have formed five or six volumes the size of the present work. Had he lived as far as might have been fairly expected beyond the age of fifty-one, with health, financial support, extensive assistance and means of publication, there is no reason why he could not have seen it all through the press.

In 1915 the present editors, one of whom had been associated for some years with Professor Flügel in this enterprise, undertook with renewed support from the Carnegie Institution to determine what was best to do with what he had left. One of the first questions to answer was obviously whether the essential materials were complete—whether all the slips for Chaucer's works had been made. Aside from the fact noted already that no slips had been made for certain passages, and the fact that there had been certain known losses, it could not be assumed that during all these years there had been no sporadic oversights and leakage. There is no information as to how Dr. Flügel had satisfied himself as to the part which he had worked over, but it was quite certain that the latter two-thirds of the alphabet had not been properly tested. An adequate test made by several colleagues of the editors showed that at least one-half of one per cent of the slips were missing, from various parts of the work, including so peculiar a word as "Preambulacioun." Such incompleteness showed clearly that the old Chaucer slips must be abandoned, unless the concordance element in the plan, deemed the most essential by all persons concerned, were also to be abandoned. The making of new slips necessarily involved the reduction of the plan; after so long a history it was vital to look confidently for completion in a small number of years. While people have been waiting for this work, and while concordance-enthusiasts have been warned off the Chaucer field, a dozen lesser English poets have been thus opened to more accurate study.

This decision meant putting aside for the time being all of Professor Flügel's work; happily only for the time being. To see the fruits of such learning and labor go to waste would have been a weight on the spirit of everyone aware of the facts. His analysis of the semasiology and usages of Chaucer's vocabulary in the first third of the alphabet, and amassing of instances of his words in earlier authors in several languages, would form a valuable contribution to any dictionary of later medieval English. That his Schmerzenskind, or daily delight, as he variously called it, should be used in a work of wider scope would doubtless have pleased this generous scholar. Through the loyalty and public-spirit of his heirs, his entire MS and collections were transferred in 1925 to Cornell University, to be used for the newly projected dictionary of Middle English; under happier stars, it is to be hoped, than those of the "Glossarial Concordance" projected in 1871.

The present volume is the result of the reduced plan forced by the situation, and is the fruit of entirely fresh materials. Though it is unpretending compared with the work planned by Furnivall, Aylward and Flügel, and in some ways much less valuable, undoubtedly the simple concordance-arrangement of the passages has advantages over the dictionary-arrangement, as exemplified in the Shelley concordance. The enterprise has had the advantage of the greatly improved technique in concordance-making developed in recent years. Its beginning had to be delayed till the war was over; its history since then was described in 1923 in Modern Language Notes, XXXVIII. 504-6.

This work would have been impossible without the help of many people, most of them volunteers. Thanks are gladly given to the following generous collaborators, some of them college professors and deans, scattered all the way from Massachusetts to Honolulu, for making the slips: Mrs. R. L. Hampton, Mrs. S. A. Huston, Mrs. F. N. Kerwin (double amount), Mrs. W. E. Lockwood, Mrs. G. H. Martin, Mrs. W. A. Matzinger, Mrs. N. H. Petree, Mrs. L. E. Read, Mrs. Ira Van Vlear; Misses A. M. Bille, J. M. Burnham, Mary Calloway, E. J. Cleveland, H. L. Cohen, C. A. Davidson, Charlotte D'Evelyn (double amount), B. K. Freeman, Pauline Gartzman (double amount), Harriet Hayes, M. B. Jefferds, M. S. Kerns, M. F. Loop, A. F. Potts, Mary Purdy, Margaret Richter, E. P. Rings, I. E. Ronan, Elizabeth Servis (double amount), E. N. Stalker, M. A. Stanford, J. M. Tatlock, Grace Thomasma; Messrs. A. G. Beach, J. K. Bonnell (deceased), L. N. Broughton, C. H. Conley, J. D. Cooke, B. G. Grim, G. H. Hartwig, Gilbert Knipmeyer, M. L. McClintock, Walter MacKellar, B. F. Stelter, H. A. Stevens, A. H. Upham, S. L. Wolff, C. W. Wright.

Much other important help was supplied. The editors are grateful for the assistance of Mr. A. A. Bennett. Miss A. N. Hays and Mr. Gilbert Knipmeyer gave time freely to making slips for variants and for specimens selected by the editors, and for verifying, sorting and the like, and Professor W. H. Davis for expert proof-reading. Without the intelligence, accuracy and speed of Miss Phyllis M. Carbaugh the work would have been done less quickly and well. The liberal use allowed (as mentioned already) by Professors F. N. Robinson and R. K. Root of the variants for their editions encourages the hope that too many important variants have not been missed. The same may be said of the use of the Stevenson-MacCracken collations allowed by Dr. J. T. T. Brown, President H. N. MacCracken and Sir William S. McCormick. The family of the late Professor Flügel freely allowed the use of his materials and equipment, which in some cases have saved much time and promoted accuracy. Professor Lane Cooper, most experienced of concordance-makers, helped in various ways; in particular, the instructions for preparing the slips were based, with great modifications, on those sent out by him for the concordance to Horace. For the mere pleasure of mentioning his name, the editors add that of Professor George Lyman Kittredge, to whom both of them owe the same heavy debt as all students of early English, and one of them much more than this. Finally, all the gratitude does not go to individuals. The Carnegie Institution of Washington made the undertaking possible by adequate financial aid; under President Woodward and President Merriam alike it has been invariably helpful and generous. Stanford University has showed its habitual public spirit and sympathy for scholarship by allowing the present editors, as it had allowed Professor Flügel, much free time and other assistance.

the beste that we kan, where as we been withholde,
as hertely as I dar and kan, ne haste yow
wel that wisely kan abyde, and in wicked janglerie of women kan hide thyngis that science that he kan withouten swiche . . . as he nought ne kan he shal nat been ashamed
that the janglerie of women kan hide

as who seith that a womman kan nat . . .
I kan hyde and hele thynges that men
a covetous man ne kan nought deme, ne
"Taak no conseil of a fool, for he ne kan nought conseil
they ne kan no conseil hyde; for Salomon ne kan I nat deme but by conjectyng
yow this vileynye, certes, I kan nat wel answere,
y-taught, that kan nat have pacience, or
and, sayvynge youre grace, I kan nat seen han wel y-geten hem and wel konne usen that is ydel and slow kan never fynde shal nat konne answere to so manye faire resous as we konne and mowen, that it lyke unto
Thus heelpen hym God, as Judicum can telle.
Ful wys is he that kan hymselfen knowe!
Thus kan Fortune hir wheel governe and gye,
That highte Dant, for he kan al devyse
Whanne he escaped was he kan nat stente
Ne kan in syngyng crie ne biwalle
I kan nat love a coward, by my feith!
'Allas! and konne ye been agast of ewenys?
But I wol passe as lightly as I kan.
Dredeth no dreem; I kan sey yow namore.
But I ne kan nat bulite it to the bren,
As kan the holy doctour Augustyn,
I kan noon harm of no womman divyne!
Than hadde Boece, or any that kan synge.
Lat se, konne ye youre fader countrefete?
Thus kan I forme, and peynte a creature,
Whan that me list,—who kan me countrefete?
For, right as she kan peynte a lilie whit,
Kan kepe a forest best of any man;
Now kepeth wel, for if ye wolde ye kan;
Seyde I nat wel, I kan nat speke in terme?
For I kan al by rote that I telle.
Thus kan I preche agayn that same vice
Yet kan I maken oother folk to twynne
Swiche thynges kan they wel reporte and holde.
A moral tale yet I yow telle kan,
He seith he kan no difference fynde
He kan no conseil kepe, it is no drede.
And seyde thus: 'For I ne kan nat fynde
But natheles, if I kan shapen it so
What that he mente therby, I kan nat seyn;
That gentil text kan I wel understonde.
And Jacob eek, as ferforth as I kan,
Wher can ye seye in any maner age
And yet with barly breed Mark telle kan
Ye wise wyves that kan understonde.
For half so boldly kan ther no man
Swere and lye as a womman kan.
I-wis a wyf, if that she kan hir good,
And som for she kan either synge or daunce,
To be my wardecors, as he kan best,
Suffreth alway, syn ye so wel kan preche,
The bren, as I best kan, noon moeste I selle;
That women kan nat kepe hir mariage.
But now kan no man se none elves mo,
Pardoe, we women konne no thyng hele;
Yet, out it moot, we kan no conseil hyde.
This olde folk kan muchel thyng, 'quod she.
I nam but deed but if that I kan seyn
To do the gentil dedes that he kan,
'Wel kan the wise poete of Florence,
That kan an hurt deer from an hool y-knowe
I kan no bettre telle, feithfully.'
But whan us liketh we kan take us oon,
Or lyk an angel kan I ryde or go.
A lowys jogelour kan deceyve thee,
And pardoe yet kan I moore craft than he.
Konne in a chayer rede of this sentence
Though that he have al that he kan desire,
Kan seye, how ire engendreth hornycide.
Syngeth Placido,—and I shal, if I kan,
'Lo, what seyde he that so wel teche kan:
For who kan teche, and werchen, as we konne?
There is no man kan domen, by my fey!
Honour to God and yow, as we kan deeme.
But hye God som tyme senden kan
The day of weddyng cam, but no wight kan
'Janicula, I neither may ne kan
In thynges grete, and eek swich folk wel kan
Or worse, if men worse kan devyse,
They kan nat stynte of hire entencioun,
And my poverte no wight kan ne may
As clerkes, whan hem list, konne wel endite,
Ther kan no man in humblese hym acquite
As women kan, ne kan been half so trewe
And heigh plessaunce as I kan best devyse
I kan nat seye, but swich a greet corage

Can—Continued

That day and nyght he dooth al that he kan
For who kan he so buxom as a wyf?
That hath a wyf? Certes, I kan nat seye.
Lo Judith, as the storie telle kan,
And that anon, in al the haste I kan,
They konne so muchel craft on Wades boot,
I woot wel that my lord kan moore than I;
And therefore, sire,—the beste reed I kan,—
God be thy help, I kan no bettre seye.
To doon hym al the confort that I kan;
I kan nat seye; but grete God above
That from hire herte she ne dryve kan,
For craft is al, whoso that do it kan,—
Ten hundred thousand [tales] tellen I kan
To every wight that wit and reson kan!
I kan nat glose, I am a rude man,—
(Syn women konnen outen swich chaffare),
Konnen theron as muche as any man.
'Nay, sire,' quod he, 'but I wol seye as I kan
I am noon swich, I moot speke as I kan.
Al be it that I kan nat sowne his stile,
Ne kan nat clymben over so heigh a style,
Saleweth yow, as he best kan and may,
Kan in the space of o day naturel,—
And cause why? for they kan nat the craft;
Than they kan in hir lewednesse comprehende,
I kan nat make of it discrispioun,
Who kan sey bet than he, who kan do worse?
Now kan nat Canacee but herbes delve
Which I shal seyn with good wyl as I kan.
To every wight that kan on governaunce;
Though I ne kan the causes nat y-knowe;
Have heer my trouthe, in al that ever I kan,
Aurelius in al that ever he kan
That nyght and day he spedde hym that he kan
I ne kan no termes of astrology,—
'Whom I mooste drede, and love as I best kan,
Thus kan a squier doon a gentil dede
As wel as kan a knyght, withouten drede.
'What was the cause; tel me if thou kan.'
I kan namore, my tale is at an ende.
He kan so lightly cache hym in his trappe,
For I can suffre it as a philosophe,
Can he oght telle a myrie tale or tweye,
He kan of murthe, and eek of jolitee
I seye, my lord kan swich subtiltee,—
God it amende! I kan sey yow namore.
Al that I kan anon now wol I telle,
For alle our sleighthes we kan nat conclude.
Though I by oorde hem nat rehene kan,
Thogh I ne kan nat sette hem in hir kynde,—
And konne he leterure, or konne he noon,
Yet of that art they kan nat wexen sadde,
They kan nat stynte til no thyng be left;
For as men seyn he kan doon craftily,
I kan nat telle wher on it was along,
To swich a man I kan never seye nay.
How I kan werken in filosofie;
That kan an hundred foold moore subtiltee.
This preest hym biseth in al that he kan
He was so glad that I kan nat expresse
In Engelond ther kan no man it make.
In this craft, that men kan nat come therby,
Allas! kan they nat fee the fires beete?
If that youre eyen kan nat seen right,
Of filosofies understonde kan;
This worthy Pebus dooth al that he kan
That we ne konne in no thyng kan plessaunce,
Do yow plessaunce leful, as I kan;
I kan nat geeste "rum, ram, ruf," by letre;
Telle youre avys. I kan no bettre seye.
as ferforth as he kan; al moot be no man kan outely telle the nombre of twiggis that I kan nat declare . . .
or in a shulder-noon of a shepel! I kan nat seye Allas! kan a man nat bithynke hym on the gospel
Kan they nat remembren hem eek, that, the 'hundred fruyt.' I ne kan seye it ne konne nat rekene, right as he somtyme is cause for she kan nat paciently suffre.
declared yow as I kan the sevene deadly synnes, and that a man konne shryve hym of his
My selden can not telle why
If he kan make me sleepe sone,
To konne wel my swaen rede,
And was this, for ful wel I kan
This huntis, for ful wel I kan
Amende hit, if I can or may;
Whether his herte can have pite
For Fortune kan so many a wyle,
Ther be but fewe can hir begyle,
'No,' quod he, 'I can not so.'
Here yow as wel as I kan.
That I ne can discryven hit!
I have no wit that kan suffice
Allas! thoughte I, I can no read;
Ful evel rehersen hit I can nat,
I can not now wel countrefete

So wel, I can nat telle how, . . . BD. 1296
 As I can best, and that anon. . . BD. 1332
 Lady, this sorwe kan I not portreye . . . ABC. 81
 Resceyve me,—I can no further flee. . . ABC. 148
 As I best can, I wol it seyn and synge, . . . Mars. 152
 And then hir joye, for ough I can espye, . . . Mars. 221
 Nigh deed for drede, ne can hir not chevisel . . . Mars. 289
 Can I nat fynde; and yit my sorful herte, . . . Comp. L. 18
 For to be deed, I can hit nought arace; . . . Comp. L. 19
 I can but love hir best, my swete fo; . . . Comp. L. 38
 As any man can, or may, on-lyve [here]. . . Comp. L. 98
 That elde, which that al can frete and bite,— . . . Anel. 12
 For so ferforth he can hir trouthe assure, . . . Anel. 90
 To been in love as fals as ever he can, . . . Anel. 151
 Right as an hors, that can both bite and pleyne; . . . Anel. 157
 And I ne can myn herte not restreynen . . . Anel. 235
 But god save swiche a lordie I can no more . . . PF. 14 var
 Of whiche, as shortly as I can it trete, . . . PF. 34
 Can I not seyn if that the cause were . . . PF. 106
 Than man can telle; ne never wolde it nyghte, . . . PF. 209
 And of the Craft that can and hath the myght . . . PF. 220
 Of whiche that clerkes wel devyse kunne, . . . PF. 333
 The starr, that the counseyl can be-wrye; . . . PF. 348
 For other bond can I noon on hir knette; . . . PF. 438
 As wel as that my wit can me suffyse, . . . PF. 460
 'I ne sey not this by me, for I ne can . . . PF. 477
 But I can shap hereof a remedye, . . . PF. 502
 Of which he neyther rede can, ne synge; . . . PF. 516
 I can not se that arguments avayle; . . . PF. 538
 But sooth is seyd, "a fool can noght be stille." . . . PF. 574
 Who can a resoun fynde, or wit in that? . . . PF. 591
 But ye men, certes, ne konne doon no thyng aught, but yif it be . . . Bo.2. p.7. 555-60
 That helpeþ lovers, as I can, to pleyne! . . . TC.1. 11
 Who-so that can may rede hem as they write. . . TC.1. 147
 Ther n'is nat oon can war by other be! . . . TC.1. 203
 And yit as proud a pecock can he pulle! . . . TC.1. 210
 To scornen Love, which that so soone can . . . TC.1. 234
 To folwen Love, that you so wel can lede. . . TC.1. 259
 Blessed be Love, that can thus folk convertel . . . TC.1. 308
 As I best can, noon wolde God, Criseyde, . . . TC.1. 459
 But how it was, certeyn, I can not seye, . . . TC.1. 492
 That so can leye our jolite on presse, . . . TC.1. 559
 By good counseil can kepe his frend therfro. . . TC.1. 627
 Grevances, m'oughte connen wel the more Counseilen . . . TC.1. 647
 And yet paraunter can I reden thes, . . . TC.1. 668
 But to thyn help yit somewhat can I seye. . . TC.1. 672
 As I best can, gon eithen longe while. . . TC.1. 718
 Quod Troilus. "For al that evere ye conne, . . . TC.1. 776
 A thousand folw more than he can deserve!" . . . TC.1. 819
 Ne alle the men that riden conne or go . . . TC.1. 838
 He hasteth wel that wisly can abide. . . TC.1. 956
 And conne it counseil kepe in swich a wise . . . TC.1. 992
 And conne an errour alderbest withstonde. . . TC.1. 1008
 'Now, Pandarus, I can no more seye . . . TC.1. 1051
 A blind man can-not juggen wel in hewes. . . TC.2. 21
 That herkneth, as the story can devise . . . TC.2. 31
 Myn auctour shal I folwen, if I conne. . . TC.2. 49
 How that the bishop, as the book can telle, . . . TC.2. 104
 For al this world ne can I rede what . . . TC.2. 129
 Hir might is wide y-knows, and what they conne. . . TC.2. 175
 And, wher him list, best felawshap can . . . TC.2. 206
 Wher-as they can not pleylich understonde: . . . TC.2. 272
 Som time is shap, if he it can receive; . . . TC.2. 282
 Ful lightly founden, and ye conne it take! . . . TC.2. 289
 Think ek how wel and wisly that he can . . . TC.2. 374
 What men wolde of it deme I can not seye: . . . TC.2. 461
 Ne love a man ne can I naught, ne may . . . TC.2. 478
 'Can he wel speke of love?' quod she; 'I preye, . . . TC.2. 503
 As I can clepe ayein now to my minde, . . . TC.2. 521
 For love, and lat me liven as I can!' . . . TC.2. 550
 Therto we wretched women nothing conne . . . TC.2. 782
 To what fyn is swich love, I can not see, . . . TC.2. 794
 As I best can, to you, Lord, give ich al . . . TC.2. 829
 These lovers, as they conne faire endite? . . . TC.2. 886
 Ne conne wel the blisse of love disrive. . . TC.2. 889
 Aught fair in haven?, (why? for they can telle) . . . TC.2. 895
 Quod she, 'I can abide til they be gon!' . . . TC.2. 1158
 Can he theron? For by my trouthe I n'ot!' . . . TC.2. 1197
 'Ye, for I can so write,' quod she tho. . . TC.2. 1205
 Th' effect, as fer as I can understonde— . . . TC.2. 1220
 The whiche can thee hele of thyng accesse . . . TC.2. 1315

Can—Continued

I can no more, but that I wol thee serve . . . TC.3. 390
 That can I deme of possibilite. . . TC.3. 448
 That trewely, for aught I can espye, . . . TC.3. 835
 And seide, 'Nese, see how this lord can knele . . . TC.3. 962
 Can I not seyn, for she had him not rise, . . . TC.3. 967
 Al can I not as muche as it were right; . . . TC.3. 998
 Quod Pandarus, 'For aught I can espyen, . . . TC.3. 1135
 I can no more, but of this ilke tweye, . . . TC.3. 1193
 I can no more, but laude and reverence . . . TC.3. 1273
 I can no more, but thus this ilke tweye . . . TC.3. 1314
 That is so heigh that no man can it telle! . . . TC.3. 1323
 But how al-though I can not tellen al . . . TC.3. 1324
 As can myn auctour of his excellence, . . . TC.3. 1325
 Of which I can not tellen no scripture; . . . TC.3. 1369
 That of the pens that he can mokre and keeche . . . TC.3. 1375
 This brighte morwe? Nese, how can ye fare?' . . . TC.3. 1563
 And lat see now, if that he can be meriel . . . TC.3. 1673
 Can not the mountaune of a knotte unbinde, . . . TC.3. 1732
 I can no more but, sin that ye wol wende, . . . TC.3. 1812
 And to foles so her song entune . . . TC.4. 4
 If oon can singe, another can wel daunce; . . . TC.4. 409
 And this is fair, and that can good a-right. . . TC.4. 411
 But as for me, certein, I can not leve . . . TC.4. 605
 Swich vanite ne can don her non ese . . . TC.4. 703

 Can he for me so pitously compleyne? . . . TC.4. 902
 And that that I can helpe, it shal not faille! . . . TC.4. 938
 Ne, if she can herself disturben it, . . . TC.4. 1103
 Wher-with she can, if I shal right arede, . . . TC.4. 1112
 This sorful man can now no maner rede . . . TC.4. 1160
 For signe of lif, for aught he can or may, . . . TC.4. 1164
 Can he non finde in no cas on Criseyde, . . . TC.4. 1165
 Criseyde, and sin ye can do me no wese, . . . TC.4. 1194
 And to the beste, in aught that I can see. . . TC.4. 1285
 And me also, Beth glad now, if ye conne, . . . TC.4. 1316
 I can not sen wherof ye sholden drede. . . TC.4. 1365
 Bifore a crepil, for he can the craft: . . . TC.4. 1458
 For-which that wey, for aught I can espye, . . . TC.4. 1469
 To ben a wif, and as he can wel preche, . . . TC.4. 1472
 Ne, dredeles, in me ther can not sinke . . . TC.4. 1494
 For everich other wey ye can recorde, . . . TC.4. 1518
 That I ne can imaginen a wey . . . TC.4. 1626
 I can no more, it shal be founde at prevel!— . . . TC.4. 1659
 To quite him wel, that so wel can deserve! . . . TC.4. 1663
 For mannes hed imaginen ne can, . . . TC.4. 1695
 And seide, 'Y-wis, we Grekes can have joye . . . TC.5. 118
 For trewely ther can no wight you serve, . . . TC.5. 146

 To gon ayein, for aught I can him quemen; . . . TC.5. 695
 With al the aleighte and al that evere he can, . . . TC.5. 773
 Ther nas no lak in aught I can espyen. . . TC.5. 814
 But trewely I can not telle her age. . . TC.5. 826
 'Can I not seyn what may the cause be, . . . TC.5. 876
 To serve you as hertly as I can. . . TC.5. 941
 What I shal after don, can I not seye; . . . TC.5. 986
 And best can ay his lady honour kepe.' . . . TC.5. 1077
 To loke if they can sen aught of Criseyde. . . TC.5. 1113
 'Now douteles this lady can her good! . . . TC.5. 1149
 He can now sen non other remedye . . . TC.5. 1210
 I can not trowen she wol write ayein; . . . TC.5. 1298
 Compleynen as I dar or can endite. . . TC.5. 1334
 Right as your herte ay can, my lady free, . . . TC.5. 1362
 I can no more, but, cheste of every care, . . . TC.5. 1368
 My joye, in wo: I can seye you nought elles, . . . TC.5. 1377
 Criseyde shal not conne knowen me. . . TC.5. 1404
 But now no fors: I can not in you gesse . . . TC.5. 1616
 That this shal be, that can I not a-poynt. . . TC.5. 1620
 Ye han me cast! And I ne can ne may, . . . TC.5. 1696
 Deliver her sone! I can no more seye!— . . . TC.5. 1743
 Swich is this world! Who-so it can biholde, . . . TC.5. 1748
 Of his loveinge, I have seid as I can. . . TC.5. 1769
 Red Dares: he can telle hem alle i-fere. . . TC.5. 1771

Cause—Continued

Ye been the cause wherfor that I dye!
 The trespas of hem bothe, and eek the cause,
 But, by the cause that they sholde ryse
 Unwist of hym what was the cause and why;
 'The Firste Moevere of the cause above,
 The which is prince, and cause of alle thyng,
 By-cause that he fer was from hire sighte,
 By-cause he was of carpenteris craft
 It myghte be no bet, and cause why?
 By-cause that the cradel by it stood,
 By-cause that ther was swich diversitee
 As was arrayed for so heigh a cause.
 By-cause he was a man of heigh prudence,
 To have the moore cause of aqueyntance
 Tel me what is thy cause for to syng, a cause for to wepe? Jhesu Crist, oure matiere, by cause of the wrong and of the
 for this same cause, and eek by resoun of the yong by cause of that like werre, or elles by juste cause, men sholde nat seyn therfore that so muche that ye shul have honour in this cause!
 and, wyf, by-cause of thy sweete wordes, telthe the cause why: "It may nat be,"
 person, by-cause that he deemeth to the cause cesseth, or whan a newe caas
 by other cause, harm or damage may bytyde.
 cometh of dishoneste cause, change thy conseil,
 this is to seyn, the fer cause and the ny cause.
 The fer cause is Almyghty God, that is cause of alle
 thynges;
 the neer cause is thy thre enemys.
 The cause accidental was hate, the cause material been the fyve woundes
 The cause formal is the manere of cloumben in at thy wyndowes; the cause final
 'But for to speken of the fer cause,
 by-cause that the book of decrees seith,
 by juste cause, resonable.
 beren nat the spere withouten cause, but they men have no cause ne matiere to repreven man excuseth hym in wynter by cause of the grete cold,
 man by cause of his scarsetee and chyngerie, that men have no matiere ne cause to
 and for what cause or enchesoun
 by cause that in batailles fallen manye perils, dede and al oure matere and cause by cause of oure offense, that he werken in this cause that, by grace of men mowe have cause and matiere to and that ye have no cause to repente yow
 By-cause that Nero hadde of hym swich drede,
 For certeyn cause, into a fer contree,
 But trewely the cause of my comynge
 Been cause of deeth to many a creature.
 By cause I wol nat begen ydelly.
 O cause first of oure confusioun;
 And for noon other cause,—sey ye no?
 'Is this,' quod she, 'the cause of youre unreste?'
 That shal be to youre hous by cause of me,
 Feynyng a cause, for he wolde brybe,—
 'Ful many a cause, levee sire somonour,
 It is a cause of his savacioun,—
 For thou art cause why thy felawe deyth';
 By cause he is a man of greet honour,
 Broght for the same cause, and thanne hire sette
 Ne lat no clerk have cause or diligence
 I wol noon oold wyf han right for this cause;
 I dote nat; I woot the cause why
 By cause of leveful procreacioun
 Excused hym by cause of his siknesse,
 Noon other cause myghte make hym tarye.
 By-cause, alas! that he is bynd and oold
 And cause why, it sholde reported be,
 And cause why? for they kan nat the craft;
 As soore wondren somme on cause of thonder,
 And on alle thyng til that the cause is wyst,
 'What is the cause, if it be for to telle,
 That causen moost a gentil herte wo.
 If that I verraily the cause knewe
 Right for that cause and that conclusioun,
 But, sires, by-cause I am a burel man,
 By-cause that he was hire neighebour,
 'I knowe,' quod he, 'the cause of youre comynge,—
 Er ye me sleen by-cause that I yow love,
 By-cause that she wolde nat defouled be.
 'What was the cause; tel me if thou kan.
 That cause is of so greet confusioun,
 By-cause that I wolde yow atake
 By cause of which men sholde hym reverence,
 That was the cause he gan so ny hym drawe.
 By-cause that I am a lewed man;
 Men wolde hem slee by-cause of hir science.
 By-cause our fir ne was nat maad of beech,
 That is the cause, and other noon, so theech.
 If shame, or los, may causen any drede,
 Shal make al good, for it is cause of al
 And for noon other cause, trewely.
 To me, by cause of my philosophy,

Cause—Continued

The cause grettest of swich scarsetee.
 'By-cause drynke hath dominacioun
 And for this cause ben alle crowes blake
 The seconde cause that oghte make a
 The thridde cause that oghte movee a
 The cause why that Job clepeth helle misese,' by-cause that ther been thre hym oghte faste, withouten cause by cause of hem; in to curious harneys, as richesse of a man is cause of his deth;
 the delices of a man is cause of the grevous maladye
 the cause nat worth a straw? Certes, helle, by-cause of hir slouth and of hire
 morwe, but if ther were cause resonable;
 thraldom and the firste cause of thraldom
 that synne was first cause of thraldom,
 Certes, he that so dooth is cause of manye
 kan rekene, right as he somtyme is cause
 By-cause that they been the cause final of matrimoyne.
 Another cause is to yelden everich of hem to thou by cause of thyn humylitee makest ne for ypoecrisye, ne for no cause, but
 That rather wolden al my cause spille
 That thou nart cause of grace and merci here;
 Ther mot be cause wherfor that men pleynye;
 Werher for the ground and cause of al my peyne,
 Was not the cause of this confusioun;
 She was not cause of myn adversite,
 Now have ye cause to clothe yow in sable;
 Thus causeles the cause be,
 In this world heer, and cause of armonye.
 Can I not seyn if that the cause were
 That al the cause of sorwes that they drye
 Wele han they cause for to gladen ofte, that it was a necessarie cause wise men to taken and other cause of thi maladye, and that right
 I have playnly fownde the cause of thi maladye,
 For sche, that is now cause of so mochel sorwe to the, scholde ben cause yeveth the ryghtful cause of hope to han for cause of dignyte, but, ayenward, honour
 cometh to dygnite for cause of vertu.
 'for the cause of the. But I wol first me to enforme the thilke false cause of for cause of renoun. In this thynges and desiren for cause of delyt and myrnesse.
 taken for cause of power or elles for for cause of delyt. Certes now am I and desiren to geten, and for this cause blisful, thanne by the same cause moten the somme and the cause of al that be the sovereyn fyn and the cause of alle certes thilke that is cause for which men yt that a wyght wolde ryden for cause of constreyned so, by som cause, that his wille desireth and a ful grete cause to lyven and to duren, for whiche a ryght grete cause of my sorwe: that men ne knowe nat the cause why that it is?
 that thou ne knowe nat the cause of so doon for cause of yvel, ne thilk thing that telthe that the victorious cause likide to the goddes, and the cause overcomen for that it schal be cause of
 and cause of torment to schrewes.
 returned, to the cause that hath yeven thing is cause of the whiche thing, as whethir the prescience is cause of the cause of the purveance. But I ne although that the cause of the soth that although the cause of soth cometh thing is cause of the eterne prescience.
 is the cause why that science wanteth
 What discordable cause hath to-rent diligently of any of yow. And the cause
 The whiche resoun and cause of nat cause of necessite to thinges to comen, what cause or what is it (as who seith, ther may no cause be) by whiche that the endes cause of the necessite of tydynge to the cause of this errour is that of alle the strengthe is cause more efficient, and

Cometh—Continued

Of no thyng how hit cometh or gooth, . . .
 That cometh of thee, thou Cristes moder deere, . . .
 Tyme cometh eft that cese shal your sorwe; . . .
 Cometh al this newe corn from yer to yere; . . .
 Cometh al this newe science that men lere, . . .
 That cometh of thilke speres thryes thure, . . .
 Ne there nas foul that cometh of engendure, . . .
 Whan every bryd cometh ther to chese his make, . . .
 but cometh to wrecches often yclepid. . .
 comyth noght in yeeris that ben swete, . . .
 of alle goodnesse. And therof cometh it . . .
 wyne schrewydesse—that cometh . . .
 Textus. And ther-of cometh that good gessynge, . . .
 forth hir colde arysynge, cometh eft . . .
 for eyther it cometh nat altogidre to a . . .
 leeten the knowynge of hem-self, it cometh hem of . . .
 vice. . .
 that honour ne cometh nat to vertu for . . .
 cometh to dygnite for cause of vertu. . .
 And therof comyth it that, though a man . . .
 ther-of cometh it that y have right gret disdayn . . .
 ne cometh nat to folk of hir propre . . .
 ben remembred, ne cometh of wys . . .
 preysynge that cometh of the desertes . . .
 that cometh of thy deserte), foreyne . . .
 that is parfit. And herof cometh it . . .
 Cometh alle to gidre now, ye that ben . . .
 affeccions, cometh now to this sovereyn . . .
 cometh it hem nat thanne by the getynge . . .
 lyvynge ne of hire beynges ne cometh not of . . .
 thing hath to hym-self, ne cometh not of . . .
 folk, and infortune cometh alwey to . . .
 And therof cometh it that yif thou see a . . .
 Lo herof comyth and herof . . .
 For certes, that adversite cometh . . .
 that they desien, it cometh of this . . .
 autumpne comth ayein hevvy of apples; . . .
 cometh of thingis that ben grauntid that . . .
 hap cometh of causes encontryngre and . . .
 cometh of that other side (as who seith, . . .
 that although the cause of soth cometh of the sit- . . .
 tyng, . . .
 cometh of the purveaunce of god, ne that . . .
 thanne or whennes comth thilke . . .
 thilke wit cometh to beestis that ne mowen . . .
 ymaginacioun cometh to remuable bestis, . . .
 but he ay duellynge cometh byforn, and . . .
 If love be good, from whennes com'th my wo? . . .
 That com'th of him may to me savory thinke; . . .
 From whennes com'th my wailing and my pleynte? . . .
 Whan that it com'th, but wilfulliche it weiven, . . .
 That wher he com'th he pris and thank him geteth; . . .
 And ay the peple cri'de, 'Here com'th our joye! . . .
 Com'th ende good! And nece myn, Criseyde, . . .
 And seide, 'Neece, y-see who com'th here ridel . . .
 Or, as an ook com'th of a litel spir, . . .
 For swifter cours com'th thing that is of wighte, . . .
 As why this fish, and not that, com'th to were. . .
 And lat hem speke, and cometh forth with me.' . . .
 Not only this delay com'th of folie . . .
 To werken thus, whan it com'th to the nedel . . .
 'For al-so seur as day com'th after night, . . .
 'He com'th to him a pas and seith right thus, . . .
 That, ofte y-cleped, com'th and endeth peyne! . . .
 For al that com'th, com'th by necessite; . . .
 Com'th of his sitting, yit necessite . . .
 Not that it cometh for it purvey'd is,— . . .
 Whan that she com'th, the whiche shal be right sone. . .
 As I shal ben, whan that she com'th to Troye . . .
 And thennes com'th this air that is so swote, . . .
 But al too late com'th the letuare . . .
 Into this towne ne com'th not here Criseyde. . .
 The day go'th faste, and after that com'th eve, . . .
 Gaure on her whan she com'th; but softly . . .
 She com'th to-night, my lif that dorste I leye! . . .
 Upon a stream that cometh from Lete, . . .
 That ther no tyding cometh to thee, . . .
 Or what so cometh for any longe, . . .
 As soun that cometh of pipe or harpe. . .
 Cometh into Fames House, y-wys, . . .
 And cometh here in the same wyse . . .
 Thou wost now how cometh every speche, . . .
 Lo, yond he comyth. I se hise wyngis sprede. . .
 My lady comth, that al this may disteyne. . .

Day—Continued

'Allas!' quod John, 'the day that I was born!
 And we han had an il fit to this day;
 And when this jape is tald another day,
 The day is come, I may no longer byde;
 They been ful wrothe al day, as men may see.
 Upon a day, whan he his papir soghte,
 The ark of his artificial day hath ronne
 He wiste it was the eightetethe day
 And for that day, as in that latitude,
 The fourthe party of this day is gon.
 Lordynges, the tyme wasteth nyght and day
 'But of my tale how shall I doon this day?
 Fro day to day, as I shal yow devyse.
 The day is comen of hir departynge—
 I seye, the woful day fatal is come,
 O Sathan, envious syn thilke day
 She rydeth to the sowdan on a day,
 Upon thy glade day have in thy mynde
 That day that I shal drenchen in the depe!
 Bright was the sonne, as in that someres day,
 So be thy stronge champion this day;
 I am youre servant bothe nyght and day.
 The fertehe day toward the ship she wente;
 Thow haven of refut, brighte sterre of day,—
 The sorwe that this Alla nyght and day
 And som-tyme Est, ful many a wery day,
 Ful many a day, but, shortly, this is thende,
 Upon a day fil in swich repentance,
 And so bifel that in a day or two
 To vouche-sauf som day with hym to dyne.
 The day goth faste, I wol no longer lette.
 Fro day to nyght it chengeth as the tyde.
 Who lyved ever in swich delit o day
 But was as glad therof as fowel of day;
 But so bifel this marchant on a day
 With hym and with his wyf a day or tweye,
 This marchant and this monk, a day or tweye.
 The thridde day this marchant up ariseth,
 For at a certeyn day I wol yow paye,
 For by my chilyndre it is pryme of day.
 Com down to-day, and lat yow bagges stonde.
 Shal fasting al this day alenge goon?
 'To Flaundes wol I go to-morwe at day,
 And if that any thyng, by day or nyght,
 I shal nat faille surely of my day,
 Til it was day, that Daun John wente his way,
 And bad the meynce, Fare wel, have good day!
 For ye so kyndely this oother day
 When it was day this marchant cam embrace
 Fro day to day, and if so be I faille,
 That day by day to scole was his wone;
 But on a day his felawe gan he preye
 Fro day to day, til he koude it by rote,
 Twies a day it passed thurgh his throte,
 And so bifel upon a day,
 Er it be fully pryme of day,
 Til on a day—
 Upon a day bifel, that he for his fro day to nyght that with the grace of God encreeschen day by day. And thanne shul what day that it like unto youre noblesse to this day, do it, and abide nat, ne
 assigned hem a certeyn day to retourne
 And whan the day cam that his
 Fro day to nyght, right thus she wol bigynne,—
 I woot wel she wol do me slec som day
 And slepyng in hir barnn upon a day
 His foomen made a feeste upon a day,
 That er that he had wored it half a day,
 That heeld the regne after his fader day,
 And on a day bifil that in that hour
 Thus day by day this child bigan to crye,
 And kiste his fader, and dyde the same day;
 And after that, withinne a day or two,
 That ilke clooth that he hadde wored o day,
 The senatours he slow upon a day,
 As fer as that the day bigynneth dawne,
 Upon a day, as he was wont to goon,
 Syn thilke day that she was last a wyf,
 He fethered hir an hundred tyme a day
 Syn thilke day that she was seven nyght oold,
 A day or two ye shul have digestyves
 'And so bifel that longe er it were day,
 For on the morwe, as soone as it was day,
 As soone as that he wente out of the toun.
 Morde wol out, that se we day by day;
 But on a day, agayn the even-tyde,
 Hym mette a wonder drem, agayn the day:
 As for that day, he preyde hym to byde.
 Men dreme al day of owles or of apes,
 God woot it reweth me, and have good day!"
 A lite er he was mordred, on a day
 That day that Ector sholde lese his lyf,
 If thilke day he wente into bataille;
 And eek it is ny day, I may nat dwelle;
 For it was day, and eke his hennas alle;
 Til it was passed undren of the day,
 That thilke day was perilous to thee;

Day—Continued

Why woltestow suffre hym on thy day to dye?
 As thilke day was maad upon the fox.
 This mayde upon a day wente in the toun
 And so bifel soone after, on a day,
 Thus hath he falsly jugged the to day;
 Wherefore I seye al day, as men may see,
 They daunce and playen at dees, bothe day and nyght,
 Honeste ynough to dryve the day away.
 To-day, that we sholde han so fair a grace?
 But trewely, by daye it may nat bee;
 And but thou make a feeste on thilke day
 She wol nat dwelle in house half a day;
 But forth she wole, er any day be dawed,
 Unto this day it dooth myn herte boote
 And ever shal, unto myn endyng day;
 Ther-after wol we crie al day and crave.
 Lokynge out at his dore upon a day.
 He hadde a book that gladly, nyght and day,
 And every nyght and day was his custume,
 After that day we hadden never debaat.
 That on a day cam ridynge ro ryver,
 Whan that she saugh hir tyme upon a day:
 A twelf-month and a day, to seeche and leere
 The day was come that homward moste he tourne,
 Seyde he had holde his day as he hadde hight,
 That at the feeste was that ilke day;
 And al day after hidde hym as an owle,
 And so bifel that ones on a day
 Seyde this yeman; 'wiltow fer to day?
 Another day if that I sholde yow seche?'
 The day is short, and it is passed pryme,
 And yet ne wan I nothyng in this day;
 I have been syk, and that ful many a day;
 And so bifel that on a day this frere
 He syngeth nat but o masse in a day.
 'Deus hic!' quod he, 'O Thomas, freend, good day!'
 I have to day been at youre chirche at messe,
 Yet saugh I nat this day so fair a wyf
 With empty wombe, fastynge many a day,
 In our chapitre praye we day and nyght
 And therefore preye I God, bothe day and nyght,
 Upon a day out ryden knyghtes two;
 Seyde on a day bitwene hem two right thus:
 I have be shryven this day at my curat;
 'I have,' quod he, 'had a despit this day,
 This day bytyd is to myn ordre and me;
 Biforn this day of swich a questiou.
 Unto my confessor to day he spak;
 He hath to day taught us so muchel good
 This day ne herd I of youre tonge a word.
 That flokmele on a day they to hym wente,
 Been of that day whan deeth shal on us falle.
 But ther as ye han proferd me this day
 That he wolde graunten hem a certein day
 He graunten hem a day, swich as hym leste,
 The day of weddyng cam, but no wight kan
 The time of undren of the same day
 For wel she hadde herd seyde that thilke day
 And never ye to grucche it nyght ne day?
 Convoied hire, and thus the day they spende
 And seyde thus: 'Grisilde,' quod he, 'that day
 That day that maked was our mariage.'
 Departed of his norice, on a day
 For at day set he on his way is goon
 Fro day to day they ryden in hir wey.
 He on a day, in open audience,
 Another wyf, and orien day by day,
 The day that maked was our mariage!
 Curseth the day and tyme that nature
 Thus hath this pitous day a blisful ende,
 This day in murthe and revel to dispende,
 In reste and pees after his fader day,
 He preeveth folk al day, it is no drede,
 That day and nyght he dooth al that he kan
 After thy good, and hath doon many a day;
 And for his freendes on a day he sente,
 As al day falleth altercacioun
 Ye han youresselven shewed heer to-day
 Fro day to day gan in the soule impresse
 For love is bynd al day, and may nat see.
 But finally y-comen is the day
 Which carf biforn the knyght ful many a day.
 Than hoomly foo al day in thy presence!
 Thus laboureth he til that the day gan dawne,
 Now day is come, I may no longer wake;
 Heeld hire chambre unto the fourthe day,
 The moone, that at noon was thilke day
 The fourthe day compleet fro noon to noon,
 As fresh as is the brighte someres day;
 Hath take swich impressioun that day,
 Ther lakketh nyght, only but day and place
 And whan she saugh hir tyme, upon a day,
 And in this wyse many a murye day
 That ever was, for neither nyght ne day
 I prey to God that never dawne the day
 Bright was the day, and blew the firmament;
 Thexperience so preveth every day
 As he that hath a day or two y-seyn.
